Don't be surprised to see lists of books you have read, kids asking you for a new pair of glasses, your kids asking you to buy them a bike or taking you to cafes in general. Champak is all about you. Reading & listening about you. Pimp a champak. Start counting today: give a gift for a champion. The last decade of Bengaluru's real estate boom has left behind a problem of high-rise oversupply in the residential sector. The city's population is growing rapidly and in many instances, the high demand for space is being met by increasingly high-rise buildings. As a result, an average family of four is occupying a space of 1700 square feet in Bengaluru. When you're a budding realtor, you're not even sure if you're selling. Instead, the primary task for many young realtors today is to find a buyer. This can be a particularly difficult task in a sector where there are few buyers and many sellers, which means most properties are never sold. It's a dangerous path, and one that hasn't changed in over a decade. The city's real estate market is inching closer to a correction, with the National Real Estate Development Council (NAREDCO) forecasting a slowdown in the property market. In the second quarter of 2020, the slump is evident in the 20% fall in the overall share of the residential market to 15.05% in the same period last year. "It's only a matter of time when we will have a correction," said Anoop Ganguly, a senior vice-president with CBRE, the country's largest real estate services company. "The number of transactions is down but the number of enquiries is increasing." In the second quarter of 2020, the slump is evident in the 20% fall in the overall share of the residential market to 15.05% in the same period last year. Realtor Gururaj Kalimanna shares the reasons why he believes the market is sliding. In the third quarter, the 20% decline in the overall share of the residential market to 15.05% in the same period last year is evident. In the first two quarters of 2020, the share of residential sales has been inching downwards. However, the overall number of transactions is holding steady. Since the 82157476af
